ABSTRACT

This study aims to analyze the comparison of criteria for abuse of authority in the administrative law system in Indonesia and the United States and analyze the comparison of administrative law enforcement procedures in governance acts that have implications for abuse of authority in Indonesia and the United States. This research uses a normative research method with a legal approach, a comparative approach, and descriptive-analytical research specifications. The data were collected by the literature study method and then analyzed qualitatively. The data is presented in a narrative form in the form of a description and ends with a conclusion in the form of a comparison matrix.

The results of the study indicate that there are similarities and differences in the comparison of the criteria for abuse of authority and the comparison of administrative law enforcement procedures in governance acts which have implications for abuse of authority in Indonesia and the United States. This is evidenced by the similarities and differences in the comparison of the criteria for abuse of authority with the similarity in criteria for abuse of authority in the two countries, namely exceeding authority and acting arbitrarily with the difference in criteria for abuse of authority in the United States being broader, while in Indonesia it is more specific. There are similarities and differences in administrative law enforcement procedures with similarities in the magnitude of the sanctions given, such as in the light stage, sanctions will only be given in the form of disciplinary act, then in the severe stage, sanctions are given to dismissal and differences in the provision of moderate sanctions in the United States, there is no temporary dismissal. an official as is the case in Indonesia.
